“ I still cannot believe that today you laid your son to rest. So I can't imagine what is like for you. I keep thinking about you all today and just wish that there was something I could do. I read somewhere "That the sadness you feel is not from the tears in your eyes that roll down your face, it is the ones from your heart that cover your soul" My prayer for you today is that in time your heart and soul will heal and that only the good memories remain. Will keep you all in my heart, thoughts, and prayers today, tomorrow and always. A friend.##imported-begin##Julie Trautman##imported-end##

I remember many days spent with Amy Jo & Dillon at daycare. While Amy Jo was always my little helper, Dillon was the one keeping me on my toes => Seeing him years later working @ the Dairy Queen I wondered if he remembered me. My questions were quickly answered by the sweet shy smile and a "Hi Becca" that only he could give. Thanks for sharing him with me those years ago. “ There is nothing harder to understand why, with the loss of a child, brother or a loved one so young. There are no words to make it easier to understand, but I remember when someone asked my mother (when she lost her child), When you go to pick a bouquet of flowers, don't you pick some young and fresh flowers to go with the wide open mature ones?, from that day on every time I see flowers blooming I think of my brother and sister and my mother's smile that day. The hurt and emptiness never goes away totally, but, may remebering the love, the smiles, and things that Dillon has done, bring a smile with the tears when you think of them. May God's peace be with each of you, and our thoughts to all that knew Dillon.##imported-begin##Bonnie##imported-end##
